Program Information

Istinye University Psychology Master's Program has educational content on many subjects from the subfields of psychology. The program focuses on teaching current theoretical knowledge of the field and preventive psychological health practices. The field of psychology is now within a multidisciplinary structure. The new trend in psychology is to give priority to practices aimed at preventing ailments rather than developing methods of treating psychological disorders. Supporting individual and social psychological health with preventive practices has become a priority issue for health policies all over the world. In the program, students will have an in-depth knowledge of current research in the field of psychology and topics such as Health Psychology, Cyber Psychology, Cognitive Psychology and Forensic Psychology that new and educated people of our country need. In this context, it will be supported that students have information equipment and develop their skills in analyzing, interpreting and applying scientific information.

The master's program not only provides theoretical knowledge and infrastructure, but also provides examples and models for students to create preventive practices on the basis of scientist & practitioner.
